

John Witte

KINGLET

A smoke-gray snippet flicking mist from the madrone we had forgotten it zipping through the limbs huddled inside all winter its brisk swagger ramping and sizzling loopy freaked flashing its tiny gold crown as if to say see how in love we are how brief how fitfully burning